When I was a boy—I'm an old man now; Look at the lines across my brow; Old Time has furrowed them there, My back is bent and my eves are dim; He has placed his finger on every limb, And pulled out most of my hair. But if life has reached December, I'm not too old to remember When I went fishing with dad.

We would each of us shoulder his part of the load, and joyfully start along the road—But dad's was the heaviest share.
Out of the village about a mile,
Over a meadow, across a sille,
And then we were almost there.
Dear old brook, I can see it still,
The mossy bank and the old gray mill,
Where I went fishing with dad.

We would wander about for a little space To find the coziest, shadiest place, To find the coziest, shadiest place,
Before we went to work,
Then did would arrange his rod and line,
And tell me just how to manage mine
When the fish began to jerk.

If I only could feel as I used to then!
If the days could only come back again,
When I went fishing with dad!

We armed our hooks with the wriggling bait.
Then seated ourselves on the bank to wait
And see if the fish would bite.
Sometimes they would only take a lock,
As if they thought there might be a book,
But couldn't be certain quite.
There was one old perch that I used to think
Would always look at the line and wink,
When I went fishing with dad.

And so we fished till the sun was high.
And the morning hours were all gone by,
And the village clock struck one.
"I am hungry, Jim," then dad would say;
"Let's give the fishes a chance to play
Until our lunch is done."
Oh, nothing has ever fasted so sweet
As the big sandwiches I used to eat
When I went fishing with dad.

Then dad and I would lie on the grass And wait for the heat of the day to pass; How happy I used to feel! And what wonderful stories he would tell To the eager boy that he loved so well, After our mid-day mea!! our mid-day meal!
And how I would nestle close to his side.
To hear of the world so big and wide,
When I went fishing with dad.

A Ship with Wings and Paddles.

Mr. Micajah Dyer, of Union county, has recently obtained a patent for an ap-paratus for navigating the air. The machine is an ingenious one, containing principles entirely new to aeronauts, and which the patentee confidently believes have solved the knotty problem of air navigation. The body of the machine in shape resembles that of an eagle, and is intended to be propelled by kinds of devices, wings and paddle-wheels, both to be simultaneously op-erated through the instrumentality of mechanism connected with the driving power. Doomsday Book.

Col. Forney writes of Doomsday Book, the work compiled by order of William "I cannot but feel a little surprised at this," said Howard, frankly. "My father used wine. I have often seen him the influence of his unwonted enthus had company. He set it before his guests, and partock of it on such occasions. At my sister's wedding reception, which occurred during his lifetime, wine was served as at the reception this morning."

He was sensitive and proud, and more willing to face an enemy and dare a loss that degree. Seven of those convicted, including two boys, one 17 and the other used the toacknowledge a mistake. Under the influence of his unwonted enthus the influence of his unwonted enthus a vessel is propelled on water. An instrument answering to a rudder is attached for guiding the machine. A balloon is to be used for elevating the "Col.
